Executive summary

Implementation of Employment Directive 2000/78/EC

- [1]. Hungary transposed Directive 2000/78/EC by adopting a comprehensive anti-discrimination code, Act No. 125 of 2003 on Equal Treatment and the Promotion of Equal Opportunities (ETA), which came into force on 27.01.2004.
- [2]. ETA defines sexual orientation as one of the numerous protected grounds and defines both direct and indirect discrimination. These definitions are greatly though not fully based on the concepts used by the EU Equality Directives. Harassment, instruction to discriminate and victimisation are also defined and outlawed in the Hungarian system.
- [3]. ETA covers both employment and all aspects of education, thus in relation to sexual orientation as a protected ground and the field where protection is provided (different aspects of employment and vocational training) Hungarian law is mostly in conformity with the Employment Directive.
- [4]. However, conformity is not complete, as exceptions provided by ETA in relation to employment by religious organisations are not fully in line with the Directive's provisions, being more lenient, not containing the requirement of a legitimate aim and allowing differentiation not only on the basis of the individual's religion but also on his/her sexual orientation.
- [5]. There are numerous fora victims of discrimination may turn to in Hungary. At the centre of the system is the Equal Treatment Authority operating from 01.02.2005. This is an administrative organ functioning under the supervision of the Government with the power to act against any discriminatory act irrespective of the ground of discrimination (sex, race, age, sexual orientation, etc.) or the field concerned (employment, education, access to goods, etc.). Beyond the requirements under Article 13 of the Race Equality Directive, the Authority is vested with the right to impose severe sanctions on persons and entities violating the obligation of equal treatment.
- [6]. Parallel to the operation of the Authority, organs that had played a role in combating discrimination before also continue to act in the field. Labour court procedures continue to be available for victims, and labour inspectorates have also kept their power to act against instances of discrimination. Victims are free to forum shop. The Ombudsmen have also retained their power to investigate cases of discrimination.

- [7]. A major novelty introduced by the ETA is the possibility of associations and other entities with a legitimate interest in ensuring compliance with the obligation of equal treatment to engage in judicial and administrative proceedings on behalf or in support of complainants. Another important innovation is the standing of representative organisations in actio popularis claims. ETA provides that, if the principle of equal treatment is violated or there is an imminent danger thereof, an action against the violation of civil rights or a labour lawsuit may be brought by any representative organisation, provided that the violation of the principle of equal treatment or the direct danger thereof is based on a characteristic that is an essential feature of the individual, and the violation affects a larger group of persons that cannot be determined accurately. A representative organization may – if the above conditions prevail – also choose to complain to the Equal Treatment Authority

Freedom of movement

- [8]. Hungarian legislation has transposed relevant community law concerning the right to free movement. Since July 2007, EU citizens have had the right to legally stay in Hungary for a maximum period of 90 days without prior notice or administrative measures. However, lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender (LGBT) people face discrimination concerning the freedom of movement, asylum and subsidiary protection, and family reunification.
- [9]. The term ‘family member’ as regards these fields only applies to spouses, dependent descendants and ancestors but the legal possibility of marriage is not provided to LGBT couples. Only from 01.01.2009 will they be entitled to officially register their partnership to be recognized by the state, EU or EEA citizens have, however, the possibility to become beneficiaries of the freedom of movement provided by Hungarian law if they prove that before entering Hungary they had been living together in a household for at least one year. According to the terminology of all three relevant Hungarian acts, same sex couples from a third country are automatically excluded from the benefits of the freedom of movement.

Asylum and subsidiary protection

- [10]. According to the relevant practice of the Office of Immigration and Nationality in recent years, persecution on account of sexual orientation has been continuously accepted as a ground for qualifying as a refugee or beneficiary of subsidiary protection. Asylum seekers – mostly from Islamic countries such as Algeria and Iran – have successfully argued that their sexual orientation was the reason of their persecution.

Family reunification

- [11]. Hungarian legislation has not taken up the possibility offered by Article 4 (3) of Council Directive 2003/86/EC on the right to family reunification since according to Article 2 of the Asylum Act same-sex partners are not recognised as family members in family reunification procedures.

Freedom of assembly

- [12]. The Hungarian Constitution and the Act on the freedom of assembly ensures the freedom of assembly. Experiences show that the Hungarian LGBT community has been able to practice freedom of assembly as no such demonstrations have been banned or dispersed since the beginning of the 1990s. The LGBT community has been organizing Gay Pride parades since 1995, and until 2007 these events had been sufficiently secured by the police.
- [13]. On 07.07.2007 participants of the Gay Pride Parade - organized in the framework of the 12th LGBT Cultural and Film Festival - were attacked by extremist groups. The attacks were organized and followed threats and homophobic comments made by a small, non-parliamentary, right wing party. While making homophobic remarks extremists severely injured several participants of the parade after they had left the event.
- [14]. We can conclude that in 2007 the police did not properly secure the Gay Pride Parade, since despite clear legal obligations it failed to do everything in order to remove the aggressive counter-demonstrators during several hours of the event.

Criminal law, hate speech

- [15]. Hungarian criminal law only prohibits incitement against a community, i.e. the most extreme form of hate speech. Court practice finds incitement against a community established only if 'stirring up hatred' prompts direct and immediate violent action. General homophobic comments that do not reach this level of severity are not prohibited by Hungarian criminal law. Consequently, the Hungarian LGBT community is not protected from hate speech that does not reach the level of incitement.
- [16]. The Ministry of Justice and Law Enforcement attempted to rectify this shortcoming and prepared a Bill that aimed at modifying the Civil Code so as to sanction hate speech as a form of civil rights' violation against, inter alia, LGBT persons. However, the Bill could not enter into force as the President of the Hungarian Republic submitted it to the Constitutional Court for a preliminary constitutional review.

- [17]. However, even in the absence of a separate legal provision on hate speech there is a theoretical possibility to challenge such expressions with the means of civil law. An actio popularis claim can be initiated in a civil proceeding on account of harassment as provided by the ETA. In such proceedings courts might establish harassment on the basis of homophobic comments; moreover the plaintiff is entitled to request a public interest fine to be imposed on the defendant. So far, however, this possibility has not been tested before courts
- [18]. Moreover, on 18.02.2008 Parliament adopted 'abuse', a new form of crime relating to hate speech. The provision, which inserts a new article into the Criminal Code, has not entered into force, since the President of the Republic has not signed it yet. The relevant Article would sanction expressions that are capable of infringing the honour or violating the human dignity of members of the Hungarian nation or certain groups of society, particularly national, ethnic, racial or religious groups. In any case, it is highly questionable whether or not this new crime would pass the constitutional test, since similar amendments had been annulled by the Constitutional Court in 2004.
- [19]. In Hungarian criminal law violence against members of national, ethnic or religious minorities qualifies as a more severe act than general violent crimes such as disorderly conduct or bodily harm. However, members of the LGBT community do not come under this qualified protection.

Transgender issues

- [20]. The Hungarian legal system deals expressly with the rights of transgender persons in only one legal provision, i.e. the ETA lists sexual identity as a ground of discrimination.
- [21]. A birth certificate entry containing one's sexual identity could be one of the grounds of discrimination against transsexual and transgender persons. Thus, modifying a birth certificate entry (e.g. sex and name) is a crucial issue in the process of changing sexes.
- [22]. Currently, an actual sex changing operation is not required as a prerequisite of modifying name or sex in birth certificates. This practice corresponds to the requirements of the right of self-determination and should be maintained. Nevertheless, it would be desirable that the Ministry of Health issued a professional protocol or legal regulation regarding the necessary documents (forensic expert opinion, medical records) in birth certificate proceedings initiated due to sex change.
- [23]. The rights of persons who change their names and sexes are infringed in the state health care system and in the field of family law. According to the rules governing services of the compulsory health insurance scheme a person must pay 90 per cent of the costs of a sex changing operation, which practically means that transgender persons should cover most of the costs of such operations even if sex changing is justified by medical-psychiatric reasons. This is highly problematic since the aim of sex changing operations is to alter one's sex so as to correspond to his/her real sexual identity.

- [24]. The draft Civil Code regulates situations where a party to a marriage or a registered partnership changes his/her sex. The draft states that in such a case marriage or registered partnership automatically terminates. This idea has been criticised as it would circumscribe the parties' right to self-determination.

Miscellaneous

- [25]. Hungarian Parliament adopted the Act on registered partnerships, which will enter into force on 01.01.2009. The Act makes it possible to establish before the register of birth certificates a registered partnership irrespective of the sex of the parties. This is a significant development, although it does not realise full equality of rights, as same sex couples are still excluded from marrying. Generally, this form of legally accepted partnership carries the same rights and obligations as marriages. However, there are several important exceptions, one being that same sex couples cannot adopt children together. There is no reasonable explanation to this rule since Hungarian law permits adoption even by single persons.
- [26]. It is common practice that before donating blood donors are asked whether they had previously entered into homosexual relationships. It is a questionable protocol since HIV and other diseases that spread through sexual contacts – according to recent scientific research – are connected to risky sexual behaviours and not to 'risky sexual orientation'. Therefore, it would be more appropriate to inquire about the sexual behaviour of donors (use of condoms, promiscuity etc.) as it is not dependent on sexual orientation.

Best practices

- [27]. ETA recognises both sexual orientation and sexual identity as protected grounds, which clearly goes beyond the standards set by the Employment Directive. Furthermore, the scope of ETA is wider than that of the Employment Directive since beyond employment it also encompasses fields such as education, housing, access to public goods and services, health care and social security.
- [28]. The Hungarian legal framework regarding sex changing has several shortcomings, although the good practice of competent authorities currently does not require an actual sex changing operation as a prerequisite of modifying name or sex in birth certificates. This good practice shows that even in the absence of express legal provisions the relevant procedures can comply with human rights standards.

- [29]. Though not ensuring full equality, the Act on registered partnerships can still be considered as progressive – even according to Hungarian LGBT organizations. The Act makes it possible to establish before the registrar of birth certificates a registered partnership irrespective of the sex of the parties. Generally, this form of legally accepted partnership carries the same rights and obligations as marriages. This can be considered as a breakthrough in several important matters concerning the life of members of the LGBT community.

A. Implementation of Employment Directive 2000/78/EC

A.1. Main features

- [30]. Hungary accomplished the task of transposing Directives 2000/43/EC and 2000/78/EC by adopting a comprehensive anti-discrimination code, the Act on Equal Treatment and the Promotion of Equal Opportunities, which came into force on 27.01.2004.<sup>1</sup>
- [31]. The ETA defines sexual orientation as one of the numerous protected grounds (along with sexual identity).<sup>2</sup> The ETA contains the definition for both direct and indirect discrimination. These definitions are greatly though not fully based on the concepts used by the Directives. Harassment, instruction to discriminate and victimisation are also defined and outlawed in the Hungarian system.
- [32]. Employment and education are both covered by the ETA, so from the point of view of sexual orientation as a protected ground and the sectors where protection is provided (different aspects of employment and vocational training),<sup>3</sup> the Hungarian legal framework is in conformity with the Employment Directive.
- [33]. However, the conformity is not complete; the main gap in transposition being that Article 22 ETA setting out a specific exemption clause for employment is not fully in line with Article 4 of the Employment Directive. Article 22 of the ETA runs as follows:

‘(1) The principle of equal treatment is not violated if

a) the differentiation is proportionate, justified by the characteristics or nature of the job and is based on all relevant and legitimate terms and conditions that may be taken in consideration in the course of recruitment; or

<sup>3</sup> Article 21, Hungary/2003. évi CXXV. törvény/(28.12.2003) contains a non-exhaustive list of employment-related areas in which direct or indirect discrimination of the employee by the employer shall amount to a breach of the requirement of equal treatment. These include the following: access to employment, with special regard to advertisements and recruitment; conditions for employment; procedures preceding or aimed at the promotion of employment; promotions, pre- or in-service training, working conditions, liability for damages and disciplinary actions; equal pay, dismissals, etc.

b) The differentiation arises directly from a religious or other ideological conviction or national or ethnic origin fundamentally determining the nature of the organisation, and it is proportional and justified by the nature of the employment activity or the conditions of its pursuit.<sup>4</sup>

- [34]. Article 22(1)(a) ETA does not clearly specify the need for a 'legitimate aim', which is a key element of the Directive's 'genuine occupational requirement' exception. Article 22(1)(b) does not only suffer from this shortcoming, but also lacks the Employment Directive's important stipulation, namely that a differentiation based on the religious ethos of an organisation may only be related to the religion of the person suffering that differentiation and not any other characteristics (e.g. the sexual orientation) of his/hers.
- [35]. There are a number of complaint mechanisms that victims of discrimination based on sexual orientation may resort to. The most evident such forum is the Egyenlő Bánásmód Hatóság (EBH) [Equal Treatment Authority],<sup>5</sup> which started its operation in February 2005. The Authority has power to act against any discriminatory act irrespective of the ground of discrimination (sexual orientation, race, age, etc.) or the field concerned (employment, education, access to goods, etc.). Furthermore, the Authority is vested with the right to impose severe sanctions on persons and legal entities violating the ban on discrimination<sup>6</sup> (for more details, see A.3.). However, other fora that had existed for victims of discrimination have remained to be operational even after the establishment of the Authority.
- [36]. The most important ones in the field of employment are the labour courts,<sup>7</sup> which are vested with the task of adjudicating employment-related legal disputes and are relatively independent within the Hungarian judiciary. The most important remedies in labour law are the following:

- call on employers to abide by the rules of labour law;
- oblige employers to terminate the violation;
- propose the imposition of the so-called 'labour law fine';

seekers on the basis of their gender, age, race, religion, or any other circumstance that is not relevant from the point of view of the occupation, shall be liable to be fined up to HUF 60,000 (HUF 240).

[40]. It is also possible for a victim of discrimination to turn to the Ombudsman (for details, see A.3.).

[41]. The relation between the different fora is the following: it is possible for a victim of discrimination to complain to the Equal Treatment Authority, or any other administrative organ before bringing a lawsuit based on the Labour Code<sup>19</sup>. If however, one brings a case before a labour court, administrative organs, including the Equal Treatment Authority may not deal with the case, unless it had been filed with them before the court case started. In such instances, the Authority may only proceed with the case once the court case is over, and may only base its decision on the facts established by the court. In the relationship between the proceedings of the different public administrative authorities the key principle is that it is up to the victim to decide which authority he/she wishes to turn to. In order to avoid double proceedings, the Authority shall inform other organs, and other organs shall inform the Authority, about the initiation of a proceeding into a case of discrimination.

A.2. Areas covered

[42]. As it was outlined above, the ETA is a comprehensive anti-discrimination code. This means in this respect that discrimination on the ground of sexual orientation is prohibited not only in relation to employment, but to all the fields and sectors covered by the ETA. As to the ETA's material scope, the following can be said. 'The ETA approaches the issue of scope from the personal, instead of the material aspect. It prohibits any discrimination in the public sector, so with regard to this sector the ETA's material scope is in fact broader than that of the equality directives.'<sup>20</sup> In the private sector however only four groups of actors fall under the ETA's scope (regardless of the field concerned):

- 'those who make a public proposal for contracting (e.g. for renting out an apartment) or call for an open tender;
- those who provide services or sell goods at premises open to customers;

- self-employed persons, legal entities and organisations without a legal entity receiving state funding in respect of their legal relations established in relation to the usage of the funding;
- employers with respect to employment (interpreted broadly).<sup>21</sup>

[43]. When considering this arrangement, we will find that it practically covers all the material fields covered by Directive 2000/43/EC.

A.3. Equality body

[44]. The Egyenlő Bánásmód Hatóság (EBH) [Equal Treatment Authority] is the specialised equality body. Established by Article 13 of the ETA the Authority started its operation on 01.02.2005. On 26.12.2004 a Government Decree was adopted on the detailed rules of its procedure.<sup>22</sup> As it was outlined above, the Authority is vested with the power and duty to act against any discriminatory act irrespective of the ground of discrimination (sexual orientation, racial or ethnic origin, age, etc.) or the field concerned (employment, education, access to goods, etc.). Beyond the powers required by the Race Equality Directive, the new body is vested with the right to impose severe sanctions on persons and legal entities violating the ban on discrimination.

[45]. The Authority is a public administrative body with the overall responsibility to ensure compliance with the principle of equal treatment. It is supervised by the Minister of Social and Labour Affairs. In order to guarantee independence, the ETA declares that 'the Authority shall not be instructed in relation to the exercise of its duties defined in this law.'<sup>23</sup> This means that in theory, despite the Ministerial supervision, the Authority shall enjoy full independence in performing its statutory tasks. A further provision is aiming to protect its independence, which sets forth that the Minister may not change or abolish the Authority's decisions in his/her supervisory role.<sup>24</sup>

[46]. However, according to expert analyses, the Authority's independence is not fully guaranteed due to its restricted budgetary independence and the fact that its President can easily be removed by the prime Minister.<sup>25</sup>

[47]. The Authority is assisted by an advisory board (the Equal Treatment Advisory Board<sup>26</sup>, whose members have extensive experience in the protection of human rights and in enforcing the principle of equal treatment, and are invited by the Prime Minister to join the Advisory Board. With regard to decisions on individual complaints, the Advisory Board's role is restricted to providing legal interpretations assisting the Authority's work.<sup>27</sup>

[48]. The competences of the Authority are set forth by Article 14 of the ETA. The Authority:

- 'shall, based on a complaint or – in cases defined in the ETA – ex officio, conduct an investigation to establish whether the principle of equal treatment has been violated, or based on a complaint conduct an investigation to establish whether employers obliged to adopt an equal opportunities plan have abided by this duty, and deliver a decision on the basis of the investigation;
- may initiate an actio popularis claim with a view to protecting the rights of persons and groups whose rights have been violated;
- review and comment on drafts of legal acts and reports concerning equal treatment;
- make proposals concerning governmental decisions and legislation pertaining to equal treatment;
- regularly inform the public and the Government about the situation concerning the enforcement of equal treatment;
- in the course of performing its duties, co-operate with the social and representation organisations and the relevant state bodies;
- continually provide information to those concerned and provide them with assistance in acting against the violation of equal treatment;
- provide assistance in the preparation of governmental reports to international organizations, especially to the Council of Europe concerning the principle of equal treatment;

- shall prepare an annual report to the Government on the activity of the Authority and its experiences obtained in the course of the application of ETA.<sup>28</sup>

[49]. As it can be seen from the above list, the Authority is vested with all the tasks included in Article 13 of Directive 2000/43/EC, but ‘in fact, the key element of the Authority’s activity is none of [these] three tasks [...], but investigating into and deciding on individual instances of discrimination. In terms of Article 14 Paragraph (1) Point (a) of the ETA, the Authority has the mandate to conduct independent investigations both ex officio and also based on individual complaints. [...] This is a quasi judicial function, so in this regard the service provided by the Authority goes beyond simple assistance in asserting claims. On the other hand, due to the scarce financial and human resources this function [does] in practice prevent the Authority from actually fulfilling the other tasks [...]’.<sup>29</sup>

[50]. This means that although Article 14 (1) (g) of ETA gives the Authority mandate to provide independent assistance to victims of discrimination (the Authority shall “continually provide information to those concerned and provide them with assistance in acting against the violation of equal treatment”). This is not done in practice, because the scarce financial and human resources<sup>30</sup> prevent the Authority from focusing on any activity other than the investigation and adjudication of complaints from victims of discrimination.

[51]. The Ombudsman could also deal with discrimination on the ground of sexual orientation.<sup>31</sup> Discrimination based on sexual orientation would fall into the scope of authority of the Ombudsman for Civil Rights (one of Hungary's four Ombudsmen, the other three being the Ombudsman for Future Generations, the Ombudsman for the Rights of National and Ethnic Minorities and the Ombudsman for Data Protection).

[52]. Under Act LIX of 1993, any victim of acts or omissions of public authorities or public service providers can complain to the Ombudsmen's office, provided that all administrative remedies are exhausted or none exist. The Ombudsmen can also proceed ex officio.

[53]. Ombudsmen can investigate into any authority, including the armed forces, national security services, and policing organisations. They may request information, a hearing, written explanation, declaration or opinion from the competent official or demand that an inquiry be conducted by a superior. When finding a violation, the Ombudsmen issue recommendations, to which perpetrators must respond within 30 days. Further, Ombudsmen may:

- petition the Constitutional Court;
- initiate that the prosecutor issues a protest;
- propose that a legal provision be amended, repealed or issued. Ombudsmen may initiate disciplinary or criminal proceedings.

[54]. The ETA fails to settle potential clashes of authority between the Authority and the Ombudsmen who are also entitled to conduct individual and comprehensive investigations into cases of discrimination. The ETA contains no solution for cases in which the conclusion of and the sanction imposed by the Authority is not in line with the opinion of the Ombudsman. It only restricts itself to exempting the decisions and measures of the Ombudsmen from the Authority's investigation.<sup>32</sup> In practice however, a relatively good working relationship has been evolving between the two entities.

A.4. Art 9/2 of the Employment Directive 2000/78/EC

[55]. The ETA has brought significant improvement in the possibilities of interested associations in the combat discrimination. The law introduced the term social and interest representation organisation (hereinafter: representative organisations). Pursuant to Article 3 (f) ETA, such organisations include

- any social organisation or foundation whose objectives set out in its articles of association or statutes include the promotion of equal social opportunities of disadvantaged groups or the protection of human rights;
- in respect of a particular national and ethnic minority, the minority self-government; t
- the trade union in respect of matters related to employees' material, social and cultural situation and living and working conditions.<sup>33</sup>

[56]. Under ETA,<sup>34</sup> unless stipulated otherwise by the law, 'any social and interest representation organisation, as well as the Authority may – based on an authorization by the victim – engage on behalf of the victim in proceedings initiated due to the infringement of the requirement of equal treatment. Furthermore, representative organisations are entitled to exercise the rights of the concerned party in administrative proceedings initiated due to the infringement of the requirement of equal treatment.

[57]. Another important novelty introduced by the ETA is the possibility of bringing an actio popularis claim. The relevant legal provision provides that if the principle of equal treatment is violated or there is a direct danger thereof, a lawsuit for the infringement of inherent rights or a labour lawsuit may be brought by

b) the Authority, or

c) any social and interest representation organisation, provided that the violation of the principle of equal treatment or the direct danger thereof was based on a characteristic that is an essential feature of the individual, and the violation affects a larger group of persons that cannot be determined accurately.<sup>35</sup>

[58]. Furthermore, a representative organisation may – if the above conditions prevail – also choose to launch a proceeding before the Authority.<sup>36</sup>

- [59]. The first and only actio popularis case regarding discrimination on the ground of sexual orientation ever emerging under the ETA was the claim brought by the organization Háttér Társaság a Melegekért (Háttér Társaság) [Háttér Support Society for Gays and Lesbians (Háttér Society)] against a denominational university, which declared that homosexual persons may not be students of the faculty of theology.<sup>37</sup>
- [60]. Háttér Society is one of the two major gay and lesbian rights groups that provide legal assistance to victims of discrimination based on sexual orientation. The other major civil society organisation is Habeas Corpus Munkacsoport [Habeas Corpus Working Group].
- [61]. These novel legal authorisations of civil society organisations can under certain circumstances be very beneficial for victims of discrimination based on sexual orientation. For instance, in cases of discriminatory practices (i.e. when the violation concerns gays and lesbians as a groups as well and not only as particular individuals), it has become possible to take effective legal action without any individual being forced to ‘come out’ and possibly face further discrimination or victimisation stemming from his/her decision to assert his/her rights.

A.5. Statistics and case law.

- [62]. Statistics. On 23.01.2008 the Senior Expert sent letters inquiring about statistics to all competent governmental organs. The Országos Igazságszolgáltatási Tanács (OIT) [National Justice Council (NJC)], the supreme organ of judicial administration informed the Senior Expert that data collection conducted on the basis of the National Statistics Program (Országos Statisztikai Adatgyűjtési Program) does not extend to statistics that show the number of court cases regarding discrimination on the ground of sexual orientation.<sup>38</sup> The Országos Munkavédelmi és Munkaügyi Felügyelőség (OMMF) [Hungarian Labour Inspectorate] also informed the Senior Expert that it does not have data concerning cases of discrimination on the ground of sexual orientation.<sup>39</sup> According to the Nemzeti Fogyasztóvédelmi Hatóság (NFH) [National Consumer Protection Authority] there have not been any complaints in respect of discrimination on the ground of sexual orientation in the indicated period.<sup>40</sup> The Egyenlő Bánásmód Hatóság (EBH) [Equal Treatment Authority] presented some statistics in respect of discrimination on the ground of sexual orientation.<sup>41</sup>

[63]. Case law. In Hungary only the conceptual standpoints (elvi állásfoglalás) and actual decisions (eseti döntés) of the Supreme Court can be accessed by the public. There are several providers that publish in electronic and paper format these data bases.<sup>42</sup> Apart from these there is no publicly accessible case law database in Hungary, which would contain court cases.

B. Freedom of Movement

B.1. EU citizen LGBT partners of EU citizens

- [64]. The recently adopted Act 1 of 2007 on the right to free movement, residence and entry of EU and EEA Member States' citizens<sup>43</sup> governs the rules related to the freedom of movement in Hungary.
- [65]. According to Article 1 (1) FMA the right of free movement and residence is provided to all EU Member State citizens, their accompanying or joining family members in compliance with the rights equally granted by the Treaty on the European Union.
- [66]. However, FMA, uses the term 'family member' in a restrictive way imposing that a family member can only be
- '1) the spouse of a Hungarian, EU or EEA citizen;
  - 2) their dependent descendant or descendant under 21 years of age;
  - 3) their dependent ancestors; etc.'<sup>44</sup>
- [67]. Thus, FMA does not mention same-sex couples, same-sex cohabitation or registered partners amongst family members.
- [68]. Article 1 (1) FMA raises problems regarding the principle of equal treatment given that only spouses are recognized as family members but registered partners cannot be considered as such. In 2007 important legislative amendments occurred concerning officially registered partnerships and partnerships recognized by state (hereinafter: registered partnership). The Hungarian government introduced registered partnership in November 2007 and the amendment will come into force on 01.01.2009. This legislative improvement facilitates equal treatment in several discriminatory areas: succession in same-sex unions, provisions regarding healthcare and pension, as well as housing and employment issues.<sup>45</sup>
- [69]. Despite last year's developments, the Hungarian legal framework still remains inconsistent as Article 2 FMA only recognizes family membership on the grounds of marriage which is interpreted by the definition of law as the union of

a man and a woman. The new institution of registered partnership recognised by the state (registered partnership) is, however, still not equal to marriage since Article 2 of the Act No. 184 of 2007 on registered partnership, introducing this institution to Hungarian law, imposes that the provisions of Act No. 4 of 1952 on marriage, family and guardianship (hereinafter referred to as Act on Marriage and Family) concerning marriage shall be applied to couples living in registered partnership except the rules governing special forms of adoption (“közös gyermekké fogadás”) and the use of name following marriage.<sup>46</sup> Therefore same sex couples cannot contract a marriage but they can be registered partners under the new regulation from 01.01.2009.

[70]. Following from the above distinction between marriage and registered partnership (also same-sex cohabitation), registered partners are automatically excluded from being categorised as “family members” but are provided with the right to free movement and residence. Namely as a positive development, it has to be mentioned that under FMA, registered partners of Hungarian or EU/EEA citizens who have lived together for at least one year are provided with the right to free movement and residence. The relevant Article states that:

‘The Republic of Hungary – as provided by this Act -secures the right of free movement and residence to

d) a person who accompanies an EEA or Hungarian citizen

d.a) who has been the dependent on a Hungarian citizen or the person who has lived in the same household with a Hungarian citizen for at least one year or who has been personally treated by the Hungarian citizen because of serious medical reasons;

d.b) who has been the dependent on an EU or EEA citizen or the person who - in their country of residence - has lived together in the same household with an EU or EEA citizen for at least one year or who has been personally treated by the EU or EEA citizen because of serious medical reasons and whose entry and residence in Hungary is authorised as a family member.’<sup>47</sup>

[71]. A note shall be taken, however, that this solution and wording of the FMA can be considered worrisome and incoherent as the text does not explicitly mention same-sex unions or registered partnership but only uses the words “accompanying” a Hungarian or EU/EEA citizen. The law-maker did not add any further interpretation concerning the scope of persons falling under the provision imposing that “a person who accompanies an EEA or Hungarian citizen” has the right to free movement and residence.

B.2. Third country LGBT partners of EU citizens

[72]. Act No. 2 of 2007 on the admission and right of residence of third-country nationals<sup>48</sup> (hereinafter: ARA) follows the same logic as FMA in relation to the free movement of LGBT persons’ family members.

[73]. Article 2 (d) ARA stipulates that ‘family member’ shall mean:

‘(d.a) the spouse of a third-country national;

(d.b) the minor child (including adopted children) of a third-country national and his/her spouse;

(d.c) the minor child, including adopted and foster children, of a third-country national where this third-country national has parental custody and the children are dependent on him/her;

(d.d) the minor child, including adopted and foster children, of the spouse of a third-country national where the spouse has parental custody and the children are dependent on him/her;’.

[74]. We can therefore conclude that Hungarian regulation related to the free movement of third-country citizens does not recognize same-sex partnership as family membership.<sup>49</sup>

B.3. Statistics and case law

[75]. Statistics. According to the Allampolgársági és Bevándorlási Hivatal (BÁH) [Office of Immigration and Nationality (OIN)], the authority dealing with foreigners entering or residing in Hungary, no statistical data referring to sexual orientation is being kept by them therefore there is no statistics that demonstrate the impact/social reality of relevant legislation for LGBT persons.<sup>50</sup>

[76]. Case law. A search in Complex Döntvénytár [Complex Decision Archive) on 18.02.2008 did not result any relevant case law. Complex Decision Archive contains the conceptual standpoints (elvi állásfoglalás) and actual decisions (eseti döntés) of the Supreme Court. Apart from this there is no publicly accessible case law database in Hungary, which would contain court cases, therefore it cannot be exclusively concluded that there have not been any relevant cases at all.

C. Asylum and subsidiary protection

C.1. Persecution of LGBT persons as ground for asylum

- [77]. According to the relevant practice of the Bevándorlási és Állampolgársági Hivatal (BÁH) [Office of Immigration and Nationality (OIN)] in the recent years, persecution because of sexual orientation has been continuously accepted as a ground for qualifying as a refugee or beneficiary of subsidiary protection. Asylum seekers – mostly from Islamic countries such as Algeria and Iran – successfully argued that their sexual orientation was the reason of their persecution as a member of a particular social group.
- [78]. Considering the fact that the Hungarian society is characterized by a quite negative attitude, whereas LGBT people still face discrimination and stigmatization in Hungary; the practice of the OIN can be regarded as a positive step forward. However, in recent cases between 2004 and 2007, the OIN requested psychiatric expert's opinion upon the asylum seekers' sexual orientation. In other cases where asylum application is based on persecution on the grounds of religion or political opinion, no such expert is requested to give his/her professional opinion therefore the OIN's practice might be considered discriminative.<sup>51</sup>
- [79]. However, OIN is only obliged to reason its resolutions when it refuses to grant asylum, therefore it is impossible to assess the considerations relating to granting asylum status. Also, it cannot be established how many cases the client referred to his/her sexual orientation as ground of persecution.

C.2. Family members in the context of asylum

- [80]. Act No. 80 of 2007 on asylum<sup>52</sup> which came into force 01.01.2008, does not recognize LGBT persons' officially registered partnership as family relationship. According to Article 2:

‘(j): family member is: a foreigner’s

<sup>52</sup> Hungary/2007. évi LXXX. törvény (29.062007). Hereinafter referred to in the body text as AA.

j.a) spouse,

j.b) minor child (including adopted and foster child), j.c) parent(s) if the person seeking recognition is a minor;'

[81]. If an asylum seeker is granted refugee status his/her family members are automatically recognized as refugees according to AA; although this provision only applies to heterosexual couples. Therefore we can conclude that provisions defining family members are contrary to Article 2 (h) of 2004/83/EC imposing that unmarried partners in a stable relationship should also be recognized as family members if the Member State's legislation or practice treats unmarried coupled in a way comparable to married couples under its law related to aliens.

[82]. Members of a same-sex couple are not considered as family members who are - in the case of a heterosexual family - automatically recognised as refugees under AA. This provision of AA is obviously discriminatory regarding LGBT persons; therefore we can conclude that asylum legislation only accepts married spouses who are - by definition of the Act on Marriage and Family – heterosexual.

C.3. Statistics and case law

[83]. Statistics. The Bevándorlási és Állampolgársági Hivatal (BÁH) [Office of Immigration and Nationality (OIN)] informed the Senior Expert that it does not have statistics that contain the sexual orientation of its clients. According to the information received from OIN asylum seekers who indicate their sexual orientation as a ground of persecution are registered as 'belonging to a certain social group'.<sup>53</sup> Therefore, sexual orientation later cannot be identified as a ground of persecution

D. Family reunification

- [85]. Hungarian legislation has not incorporated the provisions set out in Recital 5, Article 4 (3) and Article 5 (2) of Council Directive 2003/86/EC on the right to family reunification. Section 2 of the Asylum Act defines family membership - same-sex unions are not recognised in family reunification procedures. Therefore it can be stated that Hungary has not exploited the possibility ensured by the Directive.
- [86]. Family reunification procedure is only available for married couples or their family members (their minor sisters or brothers, their descendants or ascendants) trying to join together the family in the country of asylum. According to relevant Hungarian law only heterosexual couples recognised by the country of origin can be considered as spouses (married couples). Thus registered partnership or same-sex cohabitation is automatically excluded from family reunification procedures.

D.1. Statistics and case law

- [87]. Statistics The Bevándorlási és Állampolgársági Hivatal (BÁH) [Office of Immigration and Nationality (OIN)] informed the Senior Expert that it does not have statistics that contain the sexual orientation of its clients.<sup>55</sup>
- [88]. Case law. A search in Complex Döntvénytár [Complex Decision Archive) on 18.02.2008 did not result any relevant case law. Complex Decision Archive contains the conceptual standpoints (elvi állásfoglalás) and actual decisions (eseti döntés) of the Supreme Court. Apart from this there is no publicly accessible case law database in Hungary, which would contain court cases, therefore it cannot be exclusively concluded that there have not been any relevant cases at all. Furthermore, the OIN does not have a case law database either.

E. Freedom of assembly

- [89]. The Hungarian legal system recognizes the freedom of assembly. The Constitution provides that 'the Republic of Hungary acknowledges the freedom of peaceful assembly and ensures its free exercise.'<sup>56</sup>
- [90]. The act on the freedom of assembly<sup>57</sup> specifies the legal rules originating from the general clause of the Constitution. FAA states that the freedom of assembly is a fundamental civil liberty that belongs to anybody and reiterates that the Republic of Hungary acknowledges it and ensures its free exercise.<sup>58</sup> In the framework of the freedom of assembly peaceful meetings, demonstrations or processions can be organised, in which the participants could freely express their opinion. Furthermore, participants are entitled to impart their opinion to those who are concerned. However, the exercise of the freedom of assembly must not constitute any crime or call for a crime and must not infringe the rights or freedoms of others.<sup>59</sup>
- [91]. Under FAA the exercise of the freedom of assembly is subject to a prior notification to the police, which is entitled to prohibit the assembly only in cases provided by law. These are the following:
- If the event would endanger the undisturbed operation of democratic institutions or courts.
  - If public transport may not be organized elsewhere.<sup>60</sup>
- [92]. If any of these dangers are present the police – within 48 hours after receiving the notification - is entitled to prohibit the organisation of the event at the indicated time or in the indicated place.<sup>61</sup> This decision can be challenged in a speedy court procedure.<sup>62</sup>
- [93]. The organizer has the primary task of securing order during events. However, the police, if requested, cooperates in securing public order and removes any persons intending to violate peacefulness.<sup>63</sup>
- [94]. The police is entitled to break up the event in the following circumstances:

- If the event constitutes a crime or call for a crime or violates the rights or freedoms of others
- If participants appear in the event with weapons or with any other tools capable of causing harm to others
- If the event had not been notified to the police
- If the event is not conducted as notified in advance (e.g. if another route is used)<sup>64</sup>

[95]. Since 1989 the Hungarian LGBT community has been able to freely exercise freedom of assembly and their demonstrations have not been banned. Since 1995 the LGBT community has been annually organising the Lesbian Gay Bisexual Transgender Film and Cultural Festival (hereinafter: LGBT Cultural Festival). The police had been able to secure the safety of these events until 2007. Prior to 2007 persons who demonstrated against gay pride festivals used to express their disapproval as spectators in a rather unorganized way. Their homophobic remarks had been disturbing but never exceeded the level of verbalism and no physical atrocities had ever been reported.

[96]. However, in 2007 organizers of the 12th LGBT Cultural Festival reported that they encountered difficulties in negotiating with the police about the route of the Gay Pride March. According to the police these difficulties were due to the tense political and public reactions (the LGBT community received threats from extremist political groups). Nevertheless, there were no legal objections to organise the event.

[97]. On 07.07.2007 after previous threats and with the verbal support of a non-parliamentary, small right wing party - extremist groups attacked the participants of the 12th LGBT Cultural Festival. The attackers were organized, threw bottles and stones at the marchers and made homophobic comments<sup>65</sup> while following the march for several kilometres.<sup>66</sup> Furthermore, organisers reported that these groups severely injured eleven participants after they left the event.

[98]. The organisers of the homophobic demonstration had also notified their event to the police, which did not raise any legal objections.

[99]. According to media reports eight people of the anti-gay demonstration were arrested by the police in connection with the attacks.<sup>67</sup> However, some opinion

<sup>65</sup> Amongst the comments were 'fags and Jews to the Danube' and 'soap factory', which referred to the activities of the Nazis during the II World War in Budapest, or 'dirty fags'. Also, the attackers demonstrated the Nazi arm waving.

leaders pointed to the fact that the representatives of the Ministry of Justice and Law Enforcement (Minister Albert Takács and the Secretary of Law Enforcement Issues) did not condemn with necessary emphasis the violent action and blurred the responsibility of the participants of the Gay Pride March and that of the extremist demonstrators.

- [100]. In the Hungarian legal system the police has a very limited discretion to ban demonstrations. In most of the times it is possible to hold two fundamentally antagonistic events in the same time at virtually the same place since it is impossible to foresee whether a demonstration would 'endanger the undisturbed operation of democratic institutions or courts'<sup>68</sup> Furthermore, the police cannot examine the risk of any other crimes being committed at demonstrations. However, if the police notices that a demonstration is violating the rights or freedoms of others it must immediately take action to maintain order at the events and if necessary disperse the unlawful demonstration.
- [101]. There have been no bans of LGBT demonstrations so far and until 2007 the police secured these events properly. However, in July 2007 the police was not able to protect the participants of the Gay Pride March from the physical attacks of extremists appearing at an anti-gay demonstration.
- [102]. In view of the author to fulfil the requirements of FAA the police ought to have been recognised the aggression of extremists appearing at the anti-gay demonstration and called upon them to discontinue the unlawful activities. Furthermore, the police ought to have dispersed the anti-gay demonstration if the aggression had not been ended.
- [103]. However, there were no official proceedings conducted in respect of the responsibility of the police and there were no legal or non-legal consequences of the police's conduct in July 2007. Minister of Justice and Law Enforcement, Albert Takács declared in an interview that according to his opinion the police 'knew what to do and secured the demonstration with appropriate force'.<sup>69</sup> Such an opinion could explain the lack of any official investigations in this matter.
- [104]. On 09.07.2007 LGBT organizations issued a statement, in which they condemned the violent acts committed in the Gay Pride March and called upon the Minister of Justice and Law Enforcement to investigate why did the police failed to protect the peaceful demonstrators.<sup>70</sup> The organizations received no response to the statement.

The statement was signed by seven organisations: Szivárvány Misszió Alapítvány [Rainbow Mission Foundation], Atlasz SE [Atlas Sports Club], Háttér Társaság a Melegekért (Háttér Társaság) [Háttér Support Society for Gays and Lesbians (Háttér Society)], Labrisz Egyesület [Labris Society], Lambda Budapest, Patent Egyesület [Patent Society], Pride.hu.

- [105]. Furthermore, Háttér Society, issued a public call, in which it sought victims and eye witnesses to the violence in the Gay Pride March. According to the head of the organisation, nobody wanted to be involved in a possible legal proceeding, so Háttér Society could not document the incidents properly and could not initiate any proceedings viz. the police or the attackers.<sup>71</sup>
- [106]. The Hungarian equality body, Egyenlő Bánásmód Hatóság (EBH) [Equal Treatment Authority] did not issue any official statements in connection with the events of the Gay Pride March. The reasons of such an omission are unknown.

E.1. Statistics and case law

- [107]. Statistics. The Országos Rendőr-főkapitányság [National Police Department] informed the Senior Expert that it did not compile statistics relating to the number of demonstrations in favour of or against tolerance of LGBT people for the period of 2000-2007.<sup>72</sup>
- [108]. Case law. A search in Complex Döntvénytár [Complex Decision Archive) on 18.02.2008 did not result any relevant case law. Complex Decision Archive contains the conceptual standpoints (elvi állásfoglalás) and actual decisions (eseti döntés) of the Supreme Court. Apart from this there is no publicly accessible case law database in Hungary, which would contain court cases, therefore it cannot be exclusively concluded that there have not been any relevant cases at all.

F. Criminal law, hate speech

F.1. Hate speech

[109]. The Hungarian legal system does not contain a general prohibition of hate speech. It only prohibits incitement against a community, the most extreme form of hate speech. Article 269 of the Penal Code<sup>73</sup> provides that:

‘A person who in front of a wider public, stirs up hatred against

a) the Hungarian nation or

b) a national, ethnic, racial, religious group or certain groups of the society is guilty of a crime and is liable to imprisonment up to three years.’

[110]. In view of the author this piece of legislation in theory protects the LGBT community as a ‘certain group of the society’, since other aspects of Hungarian law consider persons of different sexual orientation a homogeneous group of society.<sup>74</sup> However there has not been any documented indictments or judgments issued under this article of the Penal Code in relation to the LGBT community.

[111]. Hungarian judicial practice is coherent in dealing with Article 269 cases; courts find incitement against a community established only if ‘stirring up hatred’ prompts direct and immediate violent action. Thus, the LGBT community is not protected under criminal law from general homophobic comments that do not reach this level of severity.<sup>75</sup>

[112]. The practice of the ordinary courts is supported by the relevant decisions of the Hungarian Constitutional Court.<sup>76</sup>

[113]. In September the Ministry of Justice and Law Enforcement submitted to the Parliament a bill entitled ‘Protection against hate speech’. The Bill proposed to

<sup>75</sup> Similarly, racist comments that do not directly and immediately incite hatred against racial minorities are also not banned by the legal system and there are very few criminal proceedings initiated in this regard.

give civil courts the power to impose sanctions that were otherwise available in cases of violation of personal rights.<sup>77</sup> The Bill defined hate speech as follows:

‘(1) Personal rights are violated particularly when they are directed against racial origin, national or ethnic minority membership, religious or other belief, sexual orientation, sexual identity or other important feature of personality and are concerning a minority community, which owns these features.’

(2) The perpetrator cannot allege that his/her conduct was not directly and recognizably aimed at the party or parties specified above in section (1).<sup>78</sup>

[114]. However, Hungarian President László Sólyom declined to sign the Bill and remitted it to the Constitutional Court for ‘prior constitutional control’, i.e. asking the Court to examine the Bill’s compliance with the Constitution. The President argued that the Bill contained several provisions that appeared unconstitutional. He expressed his fears that on the basis of one expression concerned individuals could flood the courts with petitions, notwithstanding the possibility of NGOs to initiate claims as well. The President argued that:

‘The possibility of several thousands of civil court proceedings and the amount of related compensations would circumscribe freedom of expression more than any other criminal law sanction.’

[115]. According to his submission this phenomenon would also deter other non-offending expressions that are necessary in a democratic society and thus hamper the functioning of a free public debate.

[116]. Furthermore, in its submission the President stated that the Bill would violate the principle of non-discrimination as members of the majority population were not provided legal protection, although their personal features were just as valuable as those of minority communities.

[117]. The expression ‘minority community’ was also found problematic by the President since it did not offer an answer to who constituted a minority. A grammatical approach would consider a minority a group that is in numerical minority compared to the whole of the society, whereas an approach that more corresponds to the aims of the bill would take into account a minority group in a smaller context such as a town or region. The President believed that this feature of the Bill would be contrary to the rule of law.

<sup>77</sup> In Hungarian law there are objective (establishing the infringement, refraining from the infringement, and ordering an apology) and subjective sanctions (compensation) attaching to the violation of personal rights.

[118]. Finally, according to the submission of the President the right of any legal aid (representative) organization to public interest litigation is also unconstitutional since it contravenes the right of self-determination.

[119]. As a result of the President's submission to the Constitutional Court the Ministry of Justice and Law Enforcement is reconsidering the concept of sanctions against hate speech in civil law.

[120]. However, even in the absence of a separate legal provision on hate speech there is a theoretical possibility to challenge such expressions with the means of civil law. An actio popularis claim<sup>79</sup> can be initiated in a civil proceeding on the ground of harassment as provided by the Equal Treatment Act.<sup>80</sup> In such proceedings courts might establish harassment on the basis of homophobic comments; moreover the plaintiff is entitled to request a public interest fine to be imposed on the defendant. So far, however, this possibility has not been tested before courts.

[121]. Moreover, on 18.02.2008 Parliament adopted 'abuse', a new form of crime relating to hate speech. The provision, which inserts a new article into the Penal Code, has not entered into force, since the President of the Republic has not signed it yet. The relevant Article provides that

‘(1) A person who in front of a wider public uses or spreads an expression, which is, in connection with the Hungarian nation or certain groups of society, particularly national, ethnic, racial or religious groups, is capable of infringing the honour or violating the human dignity of members of those groups is guilty of a misdemeanour and is liable to imprisonment up to two years.

(2) A person who in front of a wider public demonstrates a gesture – especially if it resembles or refers to an absolutist regime or idea - which is capable of infringing the honour or violating the human dignity of members of the Hungarian nation or certain groups of society, particularly national, ethnic, racial or religious groups is liable as provided in section (1)

(3) A person cannot be held liable if, in connection with the public activity of a political party or societal group conducting political activities,

a) uses or spreads an expression, which is capable of infringing the honour or violating the human dignity of that group of the society,

<sup>80</sup> Article 10 (1) Hungary/2003. évi CXXV. törvény/(28.12.2003), ETA, stipulates that harassment includes conducts of sexual or other nature related to protected grounds (e.g. sex, ethnic origin, sexual orientation) with the purpose or effect of violating human dignity and creating an intimidating, hostile, degrading, humiliating or offensive environment.

b) demonstrates a gesture provided in section (2).<sup>81</sup>

[122]. In theory these provisions could provide protection from hate speech that does not reach the severity of incitement to the LGBT community, as a certain group of society. In 2004 there had also been an attempt made at introducing criminal law sanctions against hate speech, i.e. amending Article 269 of the Criminal Code. The amendment introduced new definitions, which intended to decrease the threshold of incitement.<sup>82</sup> However, this amendment had in its entirety been annulled by the Constitutional Court, which found that the new definitions would have circumscribed the freedom of expression. Bearing this in mind, it is highly questionable whether or not the Constitutional Court would approve the new rules concerning 'abuse'. Therefore, at this stage analysing the legal provision would be premature.

F.2. Homophobic violence

[123]. After the attack of the participants of the 12th Lesbian Gay Bisexual Transgender Film and Cultural Festival<sup>83</sup> on 07.07.2007 in a joint statement eleven NGOs condemned the attacks and requested the Government to initiate the reviewing of Article 174/B of the Penal Code regulating violence against a member of a national, ethnic or religious minority so as to include violence against the LGBT community. They argued that the Article should cover violent acts committed because of someone's sexual orientation, sexual identity or belonging to another social group. The Government did not react to the statement.

[124]. Current Article 174/B concerns only members of national, ethnic or religious minorities.<sup>84</sup> Since this sui generis crime more rigorously sanctions violent acts motivated by racial or religious hatred it is argued that it could offer a more efficient protection for members of the LGBT community as well, if the above changes were made. Without such regulation perpetrators of homophobic violence thus can only be held liable for less serious conducts such as disorderly conduct or causing bodily harm. The criminal proceedings initiated after the attack on the 12th Lesbian Gay Bisexual Transgender Film and Cultural

(2) The punishment is imprisonment for a term of two to eight years if the crime is committed: (a) with the use of weapons; (b) with any other tools capable to hurt others; (c) to cause substantial harm in interests; (d) with the mortifying of the victim; (e) in a group; (f) in an organized way'.

Festival illustrates this practice as perpetrators were accused of disorderly conduct.<sup>85</sup>

F.3. Statistics and case law

- [125]. Statistics. The Igazságszolgáltatási Tanács [National Justice Council] informed the Senior Expert that it did not have statistics in respect of incitement against a community that show the number of court cases or convictions regarding homophobic hate speech. Similarly, there are no statistics at the National Justice Council that show the number of court decisions in which homophobic motivation was used as an aggregating factor in sentencing.<sup>86</sup> Legfőbb Ügyészség (LÜ) [Office of the Prosecutor General] informed the Senior Expert that the sexual orientation of perpetrators or victims is not registered in official statistics in Hungary.<sup>87</sup>
- [126]. Case law. A search in Complex Döntvénytár [Complex Decision Archive) on 18.02.2008 did not result any relevant case law. Complex Decision Archive contains the conceptual standpoints (elvi állásfoglalás) and actual decisions (eseti döntés) of the Supreme Court. Apart from this there is no publicly accessible case law database in Hungary, which would contain court cases, therefore it cannot be exclusively concluded that there have not been any relevant cases at all.

G. Transgender issues

- [127]. The Hungarian legal system deals expressly with the rights of transgender persons in only one legal provision. The Act on Equal Treatment<sup>88</sup> includes sexual identity as one of the grounds of discrimination.<sup>89</sup> In this way transgender persons constitute a separate vulnerable group in Hungarian anti-discrimination law.
- [128]. A birth certificate entry that shows sexual identity could be one of the grounds of transsexual and transgender persons' differentiation. Thus, modifying a birth certificate entry is a crucial issue in the process of changing sexes.
- [129]. According to practical experiences transsexuals who intend to modify their secondary sex characteristics could encounter difficulties in initiating the necessary legal and medical procedures. This is due to the fact that there are no specific procedural rules in this regard. This phenomenon, however, is – at least - partly compensated by the applicability of the general norms of administrative proceedings and the positive practice of competent authorities.
- [130]. The decree governing the rules concerning birth certificates and name changing<sup>90</sup> refers to changing sexes. The birth certificate contains, amongst other information, the child's sex.<sup>91</sup> According to BCD the registrar of birth certificates amends or corrects a closed entry in the birth certificate if
- it does not corresponds to the relevant rules,
  - it contains false or defective data or
  - name changing was requested.<sup>92</sup>
- [131]. Furthermore, BCD prescribes that if the sex of the child is altered the relevant birth certificate entry has to be corrected.<sup>93</sup>
- [132]. Thus, if someone intends to alter his/her name due to sex changing the relevant birth certificate entries can be amended on the basis of Articles 14-c) and 32-d) BCD and this information is then included in the state registry.
- [133]. As regards the procedural rules of registering sex changing the Birth Certificate Decree does not prescribes specific rules. The act regulating the procedural rules of administrative authority proceedings states however that this piece of legislation is applicable in authority registry proceedings<sup>94</sup>. Since the birth certificate procedure is such a proceeding the general rules of administrative proceedings can be applied in cases of sex changes.

- [134]. There is not any legal provisions that regulate what evidences can be accepted in support of sex changing. According to the fundamental principle of administrative proceedings authorities are free to judge the value of evidence and enjoy a certain discretion in this regard.
- [135]. Practical experiences show that the actual process is conducted as follows:<sup>95</sup> The request to changing one's name and sex should be submitted to the Birth Certificate Department of Central Data Processing, Registry and Election Office's Authority and Supervision Department<sup>96</sup> operating under the Ministry of Interior. The request should be accompanied by an expert opinion from a forensic psychologist or psychiatrist and a medical record from a urologist or gynaecologist. On the basis of these documents a professional opinion is prepared. The opinion is evaluated by the Ministry of Health as a quasi professional authority and it adopts a resolution on whether or not the request is well founded. The Office sends the resolution to the registrar of birth certificates who amends the birth certificate.
- [136]. Currently, an actual sex changing operation is not required as a prerequisite of modifying name or sex in birth certificates.<sup>97</sup>
- [137]. Thus, the practice of the Hungarian authorities can be considered progressive and corresponds to the right of self-determination. This good practice shows that even in the absence of expressive legal provisions the relevant procedures can comply with human rights standards. At the same time it would be important that the competent Ministry of Health issued a professional protocol or legal regulation regarding the necessary documents (expert's opinion, medical records) in birth certificate proceedings initiated because of sex change.
- [138]. The rights of persons who legally changed their names and sexes are violated in the health care system and in the field of family law. It is a justifiable demand that the medical-biological correction of their sexual identity is supported after their names and sexes are officially changed.
- [139]. The act regulating the services of the compulsory health insurance scheme states that the insured is entitled to an operation that aims to change his/her primary sex characteristics and which is partially financed by the social health insurance scheme<sup>98</sup>.

- [140]. However, the governmental decree determining the fees of various medical interventions provides that the patient has to cover 90 % of the fee in case of an operation that aims to change one's primary sex characteristics.<sup>99</sup> This is a highly questionable approach since sex changing operations are directed to alter one's sex so as to correspond to his/her real sexual identity. Financial burdens can hamper this process to a great extent. It would be justified to fully cover the expenses of such operations. One prerequisite of financing could be the registration of name and sex changing in the birth certificate.
- [141]. A further interesting question is what happens if a spouse is changing his/her sex since according to Hungarian law only persons of different sexes can live in marriage. The current Code of Family Law<sup>100</sup> does not recognize sex change as a reason of terminating marriage.<sup>101</sup> However, the new concept of the Civil Code that is currently under preparations explicitly mentions this reason of terminating marriages.<sup>102</sup> Moreover, this rule would apply to registered partnerships as well<sup>103</sup>. It is unclear how parents' rights would change after termination of a marriage for this reason.
- [142]. Háttér Társaság a Melegekért (Háttér Társaság) [Háttér Support Society for Gays and Lesbians (Háttér Society)], a leading Hungarian LGBT NGO, expressed its concerns towards the Government in connection with the above future rules. It suggested that “a transsexual and his/her spouse should have the right to declare whether they want to continue living together. If they do not, then the marriage terminates and the spouses can initiate a separate court procedure in order to settle the various financial issues, child supervision rights and other questions. If the spouses want to continue living together the marriage would alter to a registered partnership and the starting date of marriage would qualify as the starting date of the partnership. In this way, it could be

- [143]. Háttér Society also expressed its concerns in connection with the legal rule that intends to automatically terminate registered partnerships in case of sex change. According to the organization such a rule contradicts the right of self-determination and is not reasonable since parties of registered partnerships can be of different sexes.

G.1. Statistics and case law

- [144]. Statistics. The Igazságügyi és Rendészeti Minisztérium (IRM) [Ministry of Justice and Law Enforcement] provided the Senior Expert with statistics; however these statistics only show how many persons had their name and sex changed in birth certificates.<sup>105</sup> There are not any other statistics available in this regard.

H. Miscellaneous

H.1. Registered partnership

- [146]. On 17.12.2007 following heated political debate the Parliament enacted the legal regulations concerning registered partnerships.<sup>106</sup> The attack on the Gay Pride Parade in July 2007<sup>107</sup> and the coming out of Gabor Szetey, State Secretary of Human Resources at the Office of the Prime Minister, brought issues relating to LGBT rights to the centre of political attention. These events and the unpopularity of the governing parties contributed to adopting the act despite strict resistance demonstrated by the political elite earlier.<sup>108</sup> The Act on registered partnerships will enter into force on 01.01.2009.
- [147]. Before adopting the Act Szabad Demokraták Szövetsége (SZDSZ) [Alliance of Free Democrats] the small liberal party in the governing coalition submitted a bill on 24.09.2007 that aimed at securing equal rights of LGBT persons with respect to marriages. However, the bill was not supported by the Parliamentary Commission on Human Rights, Minority and Religious Affairs.<sup>109</sup>
- [148]. Meanwhile, on 22.09.2007 the Equal Treatment Authority's Advisory Board issued a proposal for legislation in this respect<sup>110</sup>. The Advisory Board supported the marriage of LGBT partners thus promoting equal treatment in relation to the right to marry. The Board
- ‘recommend[ed] to open up the institution of marriage to lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender persons as well. Consequently, it recommends the Government of the Hungarian Republic to draft and submit a bill to the Parliament that makes it possible for persons of the same sex to enter into marriage under the same conditions as those applying to persons of different sex.’<sup>111</sup>
- [149]. Though not ensuring full equality, the Act on registered partnerships can still be considered as progressive – even according to Hungarian LGBT organizations. Háttér Társaság a Melegekért (Háttér Társaság) [Háttér Support Society for Gays and Lesbians (Háttér Society)] and nine other NGOs published a joint statement, in which they welcomed the new legal rules but at the same time

noticed that a full respect of human rights would require that full equality is granted in relation to the right to marry.<sup>112</sup>

- [150]. The Act on registered partnerships makes it possible to establish before the registrar of birth certificates a registered partnership irrespective of the sex of the parties. Generally, this form of legally accepted partnership is connected with the same rights and obligations as marriages. However, there are several important exceptions: registered partners 1. may not children together; 2. do not enjoy the right to artificial insemination; 3. may not adopt each others' names (a separate administrative decision is needed to change their names); 4. in certain instances, may acquire easier separation, than married couples;<sup>113</sup>
- [151]. RPA is a significant development, which can be considered as a breakthrough in view of the previous legal rules and political attitude. However, since it does not realise the LGBT persons' right to marry it can still be criticised from a human rights standpoint.
- [152]. Furthermore, there is no reasonable explanation to exclude same sex partners from adopting children since Hungarian law permits adoption by single persons besides adoption by married couples.<sup>114</sup> This means that although there is no legal objection for one registered partner to adopt a child, such adoption would always deprive children from being officially cared for by both of their parents, and partners from being recognised as primary carers. This is obviously against children's best interests.

H.2. Blood donation

- [153]. It is an everyday practice of the National Blood Supply Society that before donating blood the donors are asked whether they had previous homosexual relationships. The Ombudsman of Data Protection was asked to issue an opinion in relation to this practice.
- [154]. The Ombudsman for Civil Rights, acting as Ombudsman of Data Protection established that the question regarding homosexual relationships

‘... is not inappropriate with a view to data protection, however [the Ombudsman] is firmly against the registering of data concerning homosexual relationships.’<sup>115</sup>

- [155]. The Ombudsman argued that the question is necessary because of medical reasons. In order to single out diseases that spread through sexual contact (e.g. HIV) doctors should be aware of this information since homosexual contacts are considered as ‘risky sexual behaviour’ in the case of blood donation. The category of ‘risky sexual behaviour’ concerns persons - including prostitutes and men entering into homosexual relationships - subjected to a higher risk of diseases that spread through sexual contact.
- [156]. The Ombudsman noticed that the latency of HIV is around 1-3 months, which means that the virus cannot be detected in the blood during this period. The problem is that blood from donors is used after a much shorter time. In this way excluding gays from blood donation, is not an inappropriate practice from the viewpoint of data protection.
- [157]. However, the opinion of the Ombudsman raises severe doubts since HIV – according to the latest scientific findings – is connected to risky sexual behaviour and not to risky sexual orientation. Although the question was examined from a data protection angle, the opinion of the Ombudsman could be taken as supporting the belief that HIV only threatens gay persons. Therefore, it would be more appropriate to inquire about the sexual behaviour of donors (use of condoms, promiscuity etc.) as it is not dependent on sexual orientation.

I. Good practice

- [158]. ETA recognises both sexual orientation and sexual identity as protected grounds, which clearly goes beyond the standards set by the Employment Directive.<sup>116</sup> Furthermore, the scope of ETA is wider than that of the Employment Directive since beyond employment it also encompasses fields such as education, housing, access to public goods and services, health care and social security.<sup>117</sup>
- [159]. The Hungarian legal framework regarding sex changing has several shortcomings, although the good practice of competent authorities currently does not require an actual sex changing operation as a prerequisite of modifying name or sex in birth certificates. This good practice shows that even in the absence of express legal provisions the relevant procedures can comply with human rights standards.<sup>118</sup>
- [160]. Though not ensuring full equality, the Act on registered partnerships can still be considered as progressive – even according to Hungarian LGBT organizations. The Act makes it possible to establish before the registrar of birth certificates a registered partnership irrespective of the sex of the parties. Generally, this form of legally accepted partnership carries the same rights and obligations as marriages. This can be considered as a breakthrough in several important matters concerning the life of members of the LGBT community.<sup>119</sup>

Annex 1 – Presentation of case law

Asylum and Subsidiary Protection

Case title	Algerian asylum seeker (case No.: 106-1-25433/9/04-M)
Decision date	21.06.2004
Reference details	Bevándorlási és Állampolgársági Hivatal (BAH) – [Office of Immigration and Nationality (OIN)]
Key facts of the case	The Algerian applicant worked as a model and hairdresser in his country of origin. He only had friends amongst his colleagues. According to his statements because of his lifestyle his sexual orientation was obviously identifiable. Once the villa where a fashion show took place was burned down as a threat against homosexuals. His best friends were shot later, he also received serious threats so the applicant realized he had to leave his country. Due to his lifestyle it was evident that he did not have the possibility to avoid serious punishment according to the Algerian criminal code, which penalizes homosexuality.

Main reasoning/argumentation	Due to the fact that Algerian criminal code penalizes homosexuality and that the applicant has been seriously threatened his asylum claim had to be considered well founded under 1951 Geneva Convention.
Key issues (concepts, interpretations) clarified by the case	In this case the authority accepted the reasoning that someone who works as a model, whose profession is hardly tolerated in Islamic countries cannot renounce his sexual orientation.
Results (sanctions) and key consequences or implications of the case	The applicant was recognized as refugee on 21.06.2004.

Case title	Algerian asylum seeker (case No.: 106-1-9320/40/07-M)
Decision date	2007
Reference details	Bevándorlási és Állampolgársági Hivatal (BÁH) – [Office of Immigration and Nationality (OIN)]
Key facts of the case	The Algerian applicant revealed his concealed sexual orientation to one of his colleagues who was thought to be a friend. However, this friend presumably had close connections to an extremist Islamic terrorist group Salafiste (the activity of which has been increasing in the region), and informed them about this. He received serious threats after that from this terrorist group, and tried to avoid them by moving to another city. Despite his efforts, the group found him again, and caught him in the street, and threatened to kill him if he does not renounce his sexual orientation. The local criminal code penalizes homosexuality, and though the state authorities do not persecute such persons directly if they are able to keep this characteristic hidden, no protection might have been expected from them either in such case, so he chose to leave the country.

Main reasoning/argumentation	Due to the fact that Algerian criminal code penalizes homosexuality and that the applicant has been seriously threatened his asylum claim had to be considered well founded under 1951 Geneva Convention.
Key issues (concepts, interpretations) clarified by the case	Sexual orientation qualifies as ground of persecution in asylum matters.
Results (sanctions) and key consequences or implications of the case	The applicant was granted refugee status in 2007.

Case title	Iranian asylum seeker (case No.: 106-5-362/32/2006-M)
Decision date	12.04.2006
Reference details	Bevándorlási és Állampolgársági Hivatal (BÁH) – [Office of Immigration and Nationality (OIN)]
Key facts of the case (max. 500 chars)	The 18 years old Iranian client claimed asylum on the basis of persecution for reasons of membership of a particular social group. He had homosexual relationships in his country of origin and once his sister-in-law saw them together and called the police. Simultaneously the client was an activist of a Christian association.

Main reasoning/argumentation	Due to his homosexuality he had to face discrimination, harassment and even potential death penalty in his country of origin. According to the latest country of origin information, homosexual orientation can be considered as the ground of persecution as a member of a particular social group. Also apostasy is severely punished by Iranian law therefore these circumstances had to be taken into consideration in favour of the applicant.
Key issues (concepts, interpretations) clarified by the case	Psychiatric examination of homosexuality lead to controversial results, two experts stated that the applicant showed “signs” of homosexual orientation while the third expert concluded that his sexual evolution is rather heterosexual. This example proved that sexual orientation cannot be subject of medical evaluation and treated as psychiatric diseases.
Results (sanctions) and key consequences or implications of the case	The client was recognized as refugee on 12.04.2006.

Miscellaneous cases

Case title	Háttér Társaság a Melegekért [Háttér Support Society for Gays and Lesbians] v. Károli Gáspár Református Egyetem [Gáspár Károli Calvinist University]
Decision date	08.06.2005
Reference details	Legfelsőbb Bíróság [Supreme Court] acting as extraordinary review court

Key facts of the case	After dismissing a theology student who had confessed his homosexuality to one of his professors, the Faculty Council of the Theological Faculty of the defendant published a general declaration on 10.10.2003, claiming that the church may not approve the education, recruitment and employment of pastors and teachers of religion who conduct a homosexual way of life. The plaintiff brought an actio popularis claim against the university requesting the court to declare that the defendant's published opinion violated the right of homosexuals as a social group to equal treatment, to withdraw its declaration as well as to pay punitive damages. Both the first and second instance courts rejected the claim of the plaintiff.
Main reasoning/argumentation	The Court accepted the claimant's argument that even the proving of an abstract disadvantage may be sufficient for the establishment of discrimination and the shifting of the burden of proof. However, it took the stance that the denominational university is exempted from the obligation to abide by the requirement of equal treatment by virtue of the general exempting rule of the ETA [Article 7 Paragraph (2)], according to which an action based on a protected characteristic 'shall not be taken to violate the requirement of equal treatment if it is found by objective consideration to have a reasonable ground directly related to the relevant legal relation'.
Key issues (concepts, interpretations) clarified by the case	Requirements of the shifting of the burden of proof and those of objective justification of discrimination in the case of denominational universities were clarified.
Results (sanctions) and key consequences or implications of the case	No sanctions were imposed on the defendant. The decision expresses that in the case of a denominational university, it may objectively be considered to be reasonable to exclude homosexuals from theological education, taking in consideration the fact that later on they may become pastors (although this is not inevitable, as students with a degree in theology do not automatically become pastors).

Case title	Háttér Társaság a Melegekért [Háttér Support Society for Gays and Lesbians] v. Pepsi Sziget Kft. [Pepsi Island Ltd.]
Decision date	2002
Reference details	Budapest II. és III. Kerületi Bíróság [2 nd and 3 rd District Court Budapest]
Key facts of the case	The plaintiff intended to participate in Pepsi Island, a cultural/musical event in Budapest in the framework of which it would have provided HIV/AIDS prevention services as well as awareness raising of LGBT rights. After successful negotiations the defendant organizer denied the request referring to an agreement that it concluded with the mayor and the leaders of the police in the relevant district. The agreement stated that the parties did not want any kind of events related to homosexuals appearing in Pepsi Island. The plaintiff asked the court to declare that the agreement is null.
Main reasoning/argumentation	The court entertained the claim of the plaintiff and declared the agreement null reasoning that it violated that anti-discrimination clause of the Constitution (Article 70/A) as it discriminated against gays and lesbians. However, the court refused to impose a public interest fine on the defendant.
Key issues (concepts, interpretations) clarified by the case	This case is the first and only documented case which established discrimination on the ground of sexual orientation. The judgment was delivered before the entering into force of the Equal Treatment Act thus the court had to refer to the relevant Article of the Constitution.
Results (sanctions) and key consequences or implications of the case	The court established discrimination on the ground of sexual orientation, but did not impose any sanction.
